Guidance on Guides

The Library has revamped its index to course and subject guides to make it easier to find the content. Clicking on Guides from the menu on the home page will now link to the main LibGuides page that is organized by topic (citations, courses, subjects, how to find, how to use, evaluating, tutorials, etc.). <http://libguides.uww.edu/>

If you have Library course guides for any of your classes, the URLs will stay the same, but you may want to take note of the new arrangement for finding them from the Library web site. And you may discover additional guides that would be helpful to you or your students.

Our Library Instruction calendar is beginning to fill up, so call or email soon to get the best choice of dates and times for your classes.

You may contact the Reference Desk at 262.472.1032 or refdesk@uww.edu — or contact your librarian liaison directly (see below).

Swan Song for Newsweek

Newsweek magazine is one of the latest casualties of the digital age. December 31, 2012 marked the last print issue of this 80-year-old American icon, which has spooned up its particular flavor of news pablum to generations of Americans.

We've seen many national and local news publications going to online only (the Christian Science Monitor, for example) — or worse, going belly up.

But Newsweek aficionados need not despair — the magazine hasn't vanished, it's just gone digital. Editor-in-Chief, Tina Brown, announced the newly christened Newsweek Global will target a worldwide audience in a format that's optimized for mobile devices. <http://geturl.uww.edu/1i8>

But some critics are less optimistic about Newsweek's chances of survival. <http://geturl.uww.edu/1iq>

Only time will tell.

Journal Holdings

The Library's Journal Holdings List is the best way to get a comprehensive picture of the Library's holdings for journals, newspapers, and magazines. It includes all print, microform, and online holdings.

Use the Journals tab on the Library home page to start your search.

Here's a short screencast that shows how the Journal Holdings List works.
